PEACE GAINS, SAYS PRESIDENT HARDING

Differences of View Held Unimportant in Relation to Four-Power Pact.

Differences of interpretation of the ffect of the four-power pact were characterized by President Harding last night as unimportant and will not be allowed to eclipse the main purpose of the treaty, of preserving eace and providing a means of consultation when peace is threatened.

The President took the occasion to announce that he was more than satisfied with the work of the American delegates and that there was no justification for the charge that they were withholding information.

BALFOUR'S XMAS WISH IS FOR LASTING PEACE FOR U. S. AND BRITAIN

A Christmas message of hope for good will and lasting peace between America and Great Britain was issued last evening by Arthur J. Balfour, head of the British empire delegation to the present conference, in which he said:

"I welcome the opportunity which has been granted me of sending Christmas greetings to my American friends, known and upknown.

"If this be the season which, "If this be the season which, above il others, suggests thoughts of peace on earth and good will toward men, surely there are no nations between whom that peace should be more secure and that good will more ardent than the two great peoples of English speech. Such has always been my faith, and never did it seem nearer complete realization that at a moment when, under American leadership, so much is being done toward diminishing armament and removing causes of international offense.

"A Christmastide so spent should be the surest prelude to a happy New Year."

With a limitation of aggressive naval armaments in sight, peace in the Pacific reasonably assured by the four-power pact, and the conference still working steadily on the remaining problems before it, the President desired to stress the larger aspects of its work as an least open and the United States. A treaty is being drafted whereby the United States recognizes the Japan and the United States the Japan and the United States and treaty is being drafted whereby the United States recognizes the Japan and the United States are respective, hold to the world at this Japanese mandate over Yap, on conditions similar to those drawn up by the league of nations. Without joining the league the United States obtains the full benefits of membership and a bit more in this particular instance. The mandated islands south of the equator will have to be discussed. on the remaining problems before it, the President desired to stress the larger aspects of its work as an answer to those who are making ob-jections to some of the details which he, personally, regards as "unimpor-tant."

Fairly Gauged Work. That the President has fairly gauged the worth of the work of the conference as it is viewed by public opinion and its effect on the Senate was today reflected by a prominent mid-western senator, who said:

"This country wants a limitation on armaments and peace. The Senate will discuss the details of the agreements of this conference at great ate. If the Senate fails to ratify them, length, reservations will be offered TO APPORTION CHINA and votes taken, but, in the end, the senate will find that the country is viewing the larger things which the President has emphasized and wants these agreements ratified as the only means of immediate progress toward disappears. disarmament and peace

Important Problems Remain to Be Dealt With Before

End Is in Sight.

BY PAUL SCOTT MOWRER. After six hard-driven weeks of negotiation, the end of the Washington conference is not yet in sight. Important problems have been dealt with, important problems are being dealt with, important problems remain to be dealt with.

We are still in the midst of a hard diplomatic struggle. That the conference will "succeed" is generally taken for granted. Some of the results can already be foreseen. The others are still obscure.

The orientation given the negotiations by American initiative was

The orientation given the negotiations by American initiative was such that, up to the present, the efforts of the American delegation have been devoted almost entirely to two principal aims—the limitation of naval armament in accordance with the plan laid down by Chairman Hughes, and the abrogation of the Anglo-Japanese alliance. The latter of these aims has already been attained, and the former, despite the French ratio dispute, seems in a fair way to attainment. But the price paid has been the subordination of all other issues, including the far eastern question.

BY LEROY T. VERNON.

On the eve of Christmas, while the conference on the limitation of armament was continuing its debate on the submarine question. President Harding was making these observations at the White House on the conference and its work:

all other issues, including the far eastern question.

In an international conference of this kind a delegation cannot very well have more than two principal objectives. To come to an understanding regarding the Anglo-Japanese and imitation plan the United States chose to concentrate upon the latter, partly because of the extreme difficulty of the former, partly for reasons of world peace and partly for reasons of interior politics.

The President added that if this course had been followed in Europe in 1914 there would have been no world war and that "the whole purpose of this conference is to provide some means where just, thoughtful. righteous peoples, who are not seeking to seize something which does not belong to them; can live peaceably together and eliminate causes of conflict. "Unless this opportunity is taken now, the President said he would "not give much for the civilization of the future."

Siberian Question.

The Siberian question, which owing to the pledges given by us to Russia in 1917, clearly involves our national honor, has not yet been taken up. Nobody wants it to be taken up. Nobody wants it to be taken up, and while it is doubtful if we would go so far as to wreck the conference in order to get Japan out of Vladivostok and the Sakhalin district, we intend at least to get some kind of declaration adopted by the conference which will insure future, if not immediate, justice to Russia.

Probable Results.

When the conference is over it will when the conference is over it will seemingly have signed one four-power treaty on Pacific islands and the ab-rogation of the Anglo-Japanese alli-ance; one nine-power treaty on China; one five-power treaty for the limita-tion of naval armament; two treaties, one regarding mandates north of the equator in the Pacific, the other re-ate. If the Senate fails to ratify them, the whole diplomatic structure collapses. Foreign delegations are following this phase of the situation with particular attention. If the United States, after refusing to ratify the Versallies treaty, which it had duly negotiated and signed, should now fail to ratify the present set of treaties, it would probably be a good long time before foreign governments would go to the time and trouble of attempting to make further treaties with us, This is a matter not merely of interior politics, but of our prestige and good standing in the world. Non-ratification, under the circumstances, is unthinkable.

LONDON. December 24.—Presentation to the Washington conference of Great Britain's plea for abolition of the submarine as a naval weapon has aroused the greatest interest here. The newspapers comment at length upon the speech of Lord Lee of Fareham, first lord of the British admiralty, before the conference on Thursday, her spare cash for indemnities, collarse of the mext reparations payment. It appears to be agreed tacitly that if the January reparations payment endangers Germany's stability, Germany must be granted a large loan. London bankers are willing to subscribe heavily if there is a real prospect of peace in Europe, but American money must help. It is proposed to give the lenders a first lien on German customs duties. The British consider such a loan essential because in five months Germany will have exhausted her present stocks of raw materials, and if she used all the proposed to give the lenders a first lien on German customs duties. the first question is, "What will the United States do?"
